

Juice Box Jam 2018 was created to inspire and educate new and senior developers on games for kids. The people running it do so that people all over can get together, create and innovate in a safe game space. The team trusts that everyone operates within that same mindset. It is not a competition but an educational creative experience.

Please follow these rules to make the best experience possible for everyone involved:

1. Keep things light and fun. Remember this is for the kids and for you!
2. We have a Code of Conduct and expect everyone involved to abide by it. Play nice and you'll be fine.
3. All teams are expected to upload a playable version or link/instructions to enable visitors to game page to play the game. Uploads can begin right after the Jam starts. Submissions will close at the end of the Jam.
4. You must share any code and assets used for creating the game, that you are legally allowed to share without breaking any other legal agreements. Don't share any code belonging to your employer or anyone except yourself or anything that is under NDA or similar. JBJ is about sharing and learning so please contribute to this by allowing people to tinker with the results of your game.
5. All uploads (code, assets, executables, etc) will be shared and licensed under Attribution-NonCommercial-ShareAlike 4.0 International Creative Commons License.
6. JBJ is a kids creation jam. All decisions in your game should be considered with regards to what's best for young ages to view. JBJ has the right to reject any team that uploads inappropriate materials that would not be considered good for a young audience.
7. Please consider what is best for an international learning and sharing game development community Use tools and assets you are allowed to use to create and upload a game under creative commons. Upload at a minimum a playable game and ideally the source code/assets for educational purposes. The games remain their creators' to do what they want with within their license agreements after the jam.
8. Find your inner child, go crazy and have fun!
